The purpose of this research study is to learn more about the biological and psychological responses in children experiencing parental cancer.

Why is this study being done?
The purpose of this research study is to learn more about the biological and psychological responses in children experiencing parental cancer.

Why participate?
Parents are very concerned about the potential impact of their cancer diagnosis on their children’s mental and behavioral health.

We are assessing the impact of parental cancer diagnosis on children and if difficulties are noted, parents will be informed and referral information will be provided.

What is involved?
We will collect:
- Information about physical and mental health
- Body and vital measurements
- Blood, hair, and saliva samples

Duration and Location
There will be 3 study visits over 18 months. Visits will take place at the University of Pittsburgh or in some circumstances, visits can take place in your home.
